ODENMAIS, West Germany. — South African Prime Minister John Vorster, who held his first meeting with U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger here yesterday, intends to tell the American official that recent racial riots in South Africa have taken a political turn, sources close to Vorster said.

Vorster views the riots, which claimed 140 lives, only as a series of murders and looting that never were converted into political action against his regime. "A general strike by the black workers in South Africa could paralyze us, but they did not strike," one of Vorster's aides said.

The aide said Vorster was prepared to answer Kissinger's questions about the riots during their talks.

Americans to veto Angola's UN application

NITED NATIONS. — The Security Council membership committee yesterday rebuffed a U.S.-led attempt to postpone action on Angola's application for UN membership until after the U.S. Republican convention in August.

The U.S. said it will now cast a 15th veto in the Council to block an African nation's bid for a UN seat. The Ford Administration hoped to delay consideration of Angola's application to prevent giving presidential challenger Ronald Reagan another campaign issue. Reagan has criticized U.S. foreign policy failures, including the defeat of the pro-Western forces in the Angolan civil war.

Ze'evi checks security at Olympic Village

By YITZHAK OKED
Jerusalem Post Reporter

EL AVIV. — Ahuf (Res.) Rehavam Ze'evi, the Prime Minister's adviser in counter-terrorism, has recently returned from Montreal where he checked the security arrangements for the Israeli sports contingent.

The Prime Minister's spokesman, Am Patir, yesterday refused to divulge details of Ze'evi's visit, saying that such matters are never made public. But it is understood from other sources that the Canadian authorities have turned down a Israeli request to allow Israeli security men at the Olympics to be armed.

A Canadian Embassy official here told The Jerusalem Post it was now policy that only Canadians will be armed at the village. The official said Canadians are especially touchy about this subject, even when Cuban guards at a trade show in Montreal several years ago opened fire with pistols and automatic weapons on some suspicious-looking individuals and wounded several innocent bystanders.

The Canadians are keeping tabs on all Arab and non-Arab terrorist organizations, the official said. Security is so tight that the Canadians will not even inform the public if they catch any terrorists trying to enter the country.

"If we give any information about this at all, it will be after the Olympic games," the official said.

Gov't to air economic plans

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Cabinet members will today discuss the government's proposals on ways to speed up economic development and distribute the economic burden justly.

The members of the Histadrut's central committee are expected to outline their proposals at a five-day meeting with the ministers in the Prime Minister's office in Tel Aviv. Although most ministers are expected to attend, this will not be a formal Cabinet meeting.

The Treasury and the Histadrut have often been at odds over economic policies. Labour federation leaders who drew up proposals for yesterday and today in the seclusion of a Bavarian village, but did not consider them pertinent to their general discussion.

During their meetings, Kissinger hopes to persuade Vorster to steer Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith to talks with black nationalists seeking to supplant Smith's white minority government.

The black uprising in South Africa in the past week also makes it likely Kissinger will want to talk about Vorster's rejection of black majority rule in South Africa.

Vorster, for his part, wants to talk about containing the growing Soviet influence in southern Africa. Mozambique, which borders South Africa, has a Marxist government, and Soviet arms and Cuban troops helped the winning side in the Angolan civil war.

South Africans also see the session as an opportunity to improve their relationship with the leading nation of the West and to start their country on a journey out of international political isolation.

In South Africa itself there were signs yesterday that the racial situation was quieting down.

A front page picture in yesterday's "Rand Daily Mail" showed a rugby match at a township which only days earlier had been the scene of rioting by angry blacks. At one point in the match, the newspaper said, police rifles were used as goal posts.

In the capital city of Pretoria, senior police officers met local black community leaders, where rioting broke out Monday and Tuesday. A senior police spokesman said the riots were quiet in the area's townships with bus and train services back to normal except in Attardville. (UPI, AP)

Apart from the 13,000 soldiers and policemen posted around the Olympic Village, exhaustive checks are being made on all foreigners entering Canada. These checks — aided by a computer — will start from the time a person applies for a Canadian visa in his home country.

The Third Secretary and Vice-Consul at the Canadian Embassy, James Lynch, told The Post that the Olympic Committee had turned down a request from a Canadian priest that they start the Olympic Games off with a minute of silence in memory of the 11 Israeli sportsmen killed by Arab terrorists four years ago at the Munich Olympics.

Lynch added, however, that the Canadian-Israeli Committee, which is the umbrella organization of all Jewish organizations in Canada, will hold on July 12, five days before the opening of the Olympic Games, a special memorial service at a Montreal synagogue. The ceremony will be attended by Jews and non-Jews.

Olympic footballers off
BEN-GURION AIRPORT. — Israel's Olympic football team left yesterday morning for two weeks of training in England before continuing on to the U.S. and the Montreal Olympics.

While in England the 20-man team will see something of the country and play a training match with the England Macabees team. At the end of the two weeks coach David Schweitzer will cut the squad to 17 men. (Itim)

A social-economic charter want to discuss their ideas with the Cabinet before putting the final touches to their proposals.

Some recommendations are designed to encourage workers to move into enterprises producing for export. Such workers for example, should get special bonuses, a highly placed source told The Jerusalem Post.

Another recommendation calls for arrangements for workers who move from one job to another to ensure that they will not suffer cuts in their severance pay.

A proposal raised by the Independent Liberals says a state law should require that receipts be given and demanded for any transaction involving over IL100.

Israel chick exports to Arab countries

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Local poultry farmers are exporting chicks (indirectly) to Arab countries.

The Jerusalem Post learned yesterday that a number of Arab countries — not bordering on Israel — are using a French importer as go-between for them and the local poultry breeders. Other Arab countries are said to be buying Israeli chicks through an agent on Cyprus.

Chicks and fertilized eggs are fast becoming an important export item. It is anticipated that when Israel's new air freight company becomes operational prices of these products will become even more competitive.

Meanwhile, Israeli chicks have a very good name for quality and it is believed that this is the main reason why Arab countries are prepared to buy them.

Hussein renews Moscow talks

MOSCOW. — King Hussein of Jordan, who has said he is interested in the possibility of buying a Soviet anti-aircraft missile system, talked at length yesterday with Soviet leaders.

The Soviet news agency Tass reported on the talks in a brief dispatch which said only that they covered "continued development of bilateral Soviet-Jordanian relations and urgent world problems of mutual interest."

Informed sources said the talks lasted for three hours in the morning, and then, after Hussein in a luncheon toast said he was "delighted" with their progress, were continued during the afternoon, forcing the cancellation of other planned activities.

The sources said President Nikolai V. Podgorny and Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko were present at the discussions for the Soviet Union. (AP)

Allon starts Bonn talks on economics

By BRIAN ARTHUR
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

BONN. — Foreign Minister Yigal Allon arrived here yesterday for the start of a three-day official visit devoted largely to discussions on economic cooperation between the two countries, but also to a tour d'horizon of world affairs and the situation in the Middle East.

Allon is here officially to head the Israel delegation to the first meeting of a mixed economic commission set up by the two governments.

The Minister flew into Frankfurt airport yesterday afternoon on an El Al jet, then continued by helicopter to Bonn to hold a first conference with his host, Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher.

Allon flew in from Zurich where Israeli officials said he had spent a day resting.

In a speech prepared for delivery at a dinner in Allon's honor last night, Genscher said it was impossible for two foreign ministers to stick to bilateral issues. They must concern themselves with the urgent need for peace in the Middle East, especially in view of the Lebanese civil war, he added.

"It is necessary," Genscher said, "that both sides make concessions so that a settlement acceptable to everyone can be found." He said he was especially pleased that leading Arab statesmen have said in Germany that they no longer question the existence of Israel. This, he said, should make it easier for Israel "to show good will and steer purposefully toward a comprehensive peace agreement."

Allon will sign an agreement to day to foster private German investment in Israel and during his talks will seek ways to cut a chronic trade deficit in trade with West Germany.

Among his nine-man delegation are Moshe Allon, assistant director-general of the department for the European Community in the Foreign Ministry, Dr. Yaacov Cohen, assistant director-general for trade in the Commerce and Industry Ministry, and Dov Kantorowitz, controller for the Exchange Department in the Finance Ministry.

Other delegation members are Yohanan Merz, Israel's Ambassador to Bonn, and Moshe Ratz, economic counselor at the embassy. Allon is also accompanied by his political advisor, Elisha Hassin, and Zeev Shek, assistant director-general of the Foreign Ministry.

West German newspaper editorials yesterday voiced full awareness of the balance of payments and trade deficit problems facing Israel and of the importance of Allon's trip to seek aid.

However, the press here is cautious on the prospects for major results. The Munich "Sueddeutsche Zeitung" writes that Jerusalem's reported wish for a $650m. credit from an international banking consortium, backed by West Germany and the rest of the European Common Market, has run up against economic misgivings in Bonn and political resistance in France and Britain.

The nationally-circulated daily "Die Welt" comments that, despite the obstacles, the country has a moral obligation to help Israel.

Egypt, Syria PMs meeting in Riyadh

POST Middle East Affairs Correspondent

The Prime Ministers of Egypt and Syria met in Riyadh last night in an attempt to bridge the political rift between their two countries and find a solution to Lebanon's 15-month civil war. The Prime Ministers, Marmoudah Salem of Egypt and Mahmoud Ayyoub of Syria, were expected to pave the way for an early summit between their respective heads of state, Anwar Sadat and Hafez Assad.

The Riyadh conference was being attended by Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, both of which have for several months been mediating between Egypt and Syria. The latter two countries have been at loggerheads since Egypt signed the Sinai Interim Settlement with Israel last September. This issue however was overtaken in the meantime by recent developments in the Lebanese strife.

The Riyadh preliminary conference last night coincided with reports of renewed fighting between the PLO and Christian militias in eastern Beirut. But news about the fighting was belittled exaggerated by the PLO.

The PLO is trying to press the Arab League to dispatch more troops of the joint Arab "peacekeeping" force to Beirut and elsewhere with the aim of speeding up the replacement of Syrian troops. The Christians, on the other hand, wish the Syrians to remain.

PLO chief Yasser Arafat yesterday announced he has dismissed Brig-Gen. Misbah Budeiri, the Chief of Staff of the semi-regular Palestine Liberation Army, who was arrested by the PLO and leftists over two weeks ago. Budeiri was due to be released last night and handed over to the Syrians under a truce arranged by Libyan Premier Abdul-Salam Jalloud. This was the third time Arafat has relieved the PLO commander, who had defied all previous dismissal orders while vowing to topple Arafat from the PLO leadership.

White House sources, however, did indicate that the President may be ready to show additional flexibility in his stand "We believe he will make a fair decision," Javits said.

The senators also submitted to the President various detailed documents showing Israel's financial need.

Earlier, White House spokesman Ron Nease said that the President considers his original foreign aid request for Israel and other states to have been "adequate." He said Ford agreed to meet with the Senators and Representatives because he was "willing to listen to other considerations."

Nessee added that the President considered the meeting not only one that would deal with the specific transitional quarter aid issue, but "much broader" questions of foreign aid as well.

Rep. Otto Passman, the powerful chairman of the House Foreign Operations subcommittee, said that the President would not agree to in-

2% devaluation: $ now IL 7.97

The Government last night devalued the Israeli pound by another two per cent, making the rate IL7.97 to the dollar instead of IL7.82. It was the tenth in a series of creeping devaluations begun as a policy in June, 1975.

The devaluation sets the new rate for buying foreign-travel dollar allocations at IL1.6 to the dollar. Announcing the devaluation yesterday, the Treasury said it would continue the creeping-devaluation policy (which allows for individual devaluations of up to two per cent at intervals not less than 30 days). The Treasury said basic commodities would not go up in price as a result of the devaluation, and did not expect imports to become more expensive immediately. A levy equal in size to the devaluation will be placed on "banks' foreign-currency holdings, and export incentives will be raised to compensate for the new rate, it said.

U.S. senators ask Ford to increase aid

By WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — President Ford will announce "very shortly" whether he will increase his $200m. transitional aid proposal for Israel, Senator Jacob Javits told reporters following a meeting with the President on this issue late last night.

Javits and four other senators laid various proposals before the President to increase the assistance for Israel. Senators Case and Inouye urged the President to provide Israel with $375m. during the three-month quarter, but observers here believed it was unlikely that the President would go that high.

White House sources, however, did indicate that the President may be ready to show additional flexibility in his stand "We believe he will make a fair decision," Javits said.

The senators also submitted to the President various detailed documents showing Israel's financial need.

Earlier, White House spokesman Ron Nease said that the President considers his original foreign aid request for Israel and other states to have been "adequate." He said Ford agreed to meet with the Senators and Representatives because he was "willing to listen to other considerations."

Nessee added that the President considered the meeting not only one that would deal with the specific transitional quarter aid issue, but "much broader" questions of foreign aid as well.

Rep. Otto Passman, the powerful chairman of the House Foreign Operations subcommittee, said that the President would not agree to increase the $200m. transitional aid compromise figure reportedly proposed for Israel last Friday. Passman, who usually supports the Administration position, was joined by several Administration officials who believe that the President has gone "about as far as he can."

But other informed sources here said that there were indications that the President might, in the end, agree to increase the amount for Israel slightly. "His $200m. offer was not fixed in concrete," one source said.

Israel is slated to receive $2.2b. in the regular fiscal year 1976 foreign aid bill and another $1.6b. in the fiscal year 1977. The transitional quarter aid is designed to meet Israel's financial needs during the three months — from July 1 through September 30 — during which the U.S. Government is shifting its fiscal calendar year.

Israel is eligible to receive as much as $550m. during the "fifth" quarter, but the President, earlier this year, sent a message to the Congress warning that he would veto the pending appropriations bill if that sum was included.

Nevertheless, last week Ford reportedly came forward with the $200m. compromise offer, a figure that disappointed Israel supporters on Capitol Hill. They had expected that the President would eventually agree to a $375m. compromise.

Yesterday, the Senate approved a $53b. foreign aid appropriation bill for the 12 months beginning October 1.

The recommendation is $481m. less than President Ford's budget request. But it is $300m. more than proposed in a companion bill to be considered in the House of Representatives today.

Gush Emunim: Resist ouster from Kaddum

By JOSHUA BRILLIANT
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Gush Emunim said last night it will resist moving the settlers from Camp Kaddum unless the resettlement is part of an overall plan for establishing Jewish settlements throughout Judea and Samaria.

In a letter to the Cabinet, sent last night, the movement said the Government must clarify its policy and plans for settlement in the West Bank. If the Government merely wants to get the settlers out of certain areas (meaning Kaddum) "our national duty is to fight with all (our) vigour," the letter said.

On Monday, the Government proposed (through the World Zionist Organization) that they move to Kochav Hashahar, Ma'ale Efrayim or Meshah on the fringes of Samaria or to Tekoa in the Gush Etzion region.

The Government wishes to move the settlers out of the Arab-populated "heart of Samaria," and the settlers' reply may precipitate a Cabinet crisis. The NRP has threatened to leave the Cabinet if the settlers are removed by force. On the other hand, Mapam has urged the use of force to remove the settlers from Kaddum, some 10 kms. west of Nablus.

Judy Siegel reports:
World Zionist Executive chairman Yosef Almog yesterday reversed his order to the Settlement Department not to handle the Kaddum issue after receiving assurance from the Government that they were solely responsible for policy.

On Tuesday, the Zionist chairman told Yehiel Admoni, the director-general of the department, to discontinue his negotiations with Gush Emunim settlers over alternative sites to Camp Kaddum in Samaria. Admoni had offered them sites on the fringes of Samaria or the Gush Etzion region on behalf of Minister-without-Portfolio Yisrael Galili, the chairman of the Ministerial Committee on Settlement.

The Government apparently wanted the WZO to be the bargaining agent rather than deal directly with the Kaddum settlers, who were allowed to live there after breaking the law. Almog, however, was nettled because the WZO appeared to be making political decisions.

Admoni and Galili, in an official announcement yesterday, said that "the sole responsibility for the Kaddum nucleus issue, in everything relating to determination of alternative sites and the transfer of the nucleus from Kaddum, devolves on the Government and not on the WZO."

They further stated that Admoni, acting on behalf of Prof. Ra'anana Weitz, head of the department, "is engaged only in performing technical settlement services" in accordance with the agreement between the Government and the WZO and in line to arrangements on settlements since 1967.

A Gush Emunim source told The Jerusalem Post last night that a careful study of the Galili document showed Admoni had no authority to discuss settlement with them. The statement said the WZO can present proposals "in the context of Government decisions" but neither the Cabinet nor its settlement committee adopted any decisions, the source said.

The Communists beat the Vatican-backed Christian Democrats in Rome's municipal election vote count on Tuesday, although together with their allies they failed to win enough council seats to form a majority. This followed the big Communist gains in this week's general elections. (UPI)

Executioner of 71 U.S. PoWs living in France

By JACK MAURICE
Jerusalem Post Correspondent
PARIS. — Joachim Peiper, 61-year-old former SS colonel and member of Hitler's personal guard, who was sentenced to death by an American court for executing 71 U.S. prisoners of war, said yesterday that he will continue to live in the French village which has been his home for the past six years.

Peiper told a French radio reporter: "France is a country of law and order. I know the French police will protect me if there is trouble." The ex-Nazi is living at Traves, near Vesoul in eastern France, with his young German wife. Their elegant modern villa is protected by fierce guard dogs. He said, "I realize my secret has been discovered, but I am happy here with my wife and dogs."

Peiper was tracked down by Pierre Durand, a staff writer for the French Communist daily

"L'Humanite," who checked out his record in Stuttgart, Berlin and Milan. The reporter established that Peiper was sentenced to death by a U.S. court in 1946 for the massacre of 71 American PoWs at Malmédy, Belgium, during the Ardennes offensive in 1944. But his sentence was commuted to a life term, of which he served only five years.

Peiper worked for the Porsche automobile firm in Stuttgart until employees demanded his dismissal. Later he was employed at a Volkswagen garage in the same city before he came to France. Former resistance fighters in Italy are also trying to bring Peiper to trial for the massacre of 34 civilians in Boes, near the French border, in 1943. The execution was a reprisal for the arrest of two German soldiers who were released by their captors unharmed.

'More jobs mean more immigrants'

By AARON SITNER

Jerusalem Post Reporter

The more jobs, the more immigrants. This is the gist of a report issued yesterday by the Knesset Labour Committee after a series of hearings on reported wholesale dismissals of new immigrants from their employment, to prevent them from attaining tenure.

The problem was originally raised in the House by Likud MK Gideon Patt last October, as a motion for the agenda. Following its referral to the Labour Committee, representatives of several organizations were invited to testify. They included the Jewish Agency, the Histadrut, the National Council for Research and Development, the Ministries of Commerce and Industry, Absorption and Labour, the State Corporations Authority and the universities.

The Labour Committee points out in its report that a new immigrant's success in his job can make or break his stay in the country. It was up to Israel to see that jobs were provided if it wanted the oleh to remain.

The report also took issue with the practice of dismissals in order to prevent a worker from becoming a permanent staff member. In most such instances new immigrants seemed to be the main sufferers. It was up to the Government, the committee pointed out, to prepare a contingency job plan to meet a situation of unemployment resulting from a recession.

The Histadrut was also asked to assist in two ways: by working through its works committees to ease new immigrant's job absorption, and to push for a clause in all collective work agreements which would ensure that arbitrary dismissals were forbidden. Where such strings did take place, the worker in question should have access to a parity committee to decide finally on the issue.

Hammer wants better pay for social workers

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Social Welfare Minister Zevulun Hammer said yesterday he supports demands by social workers for wage equalization with teachers and school counselors.

In testimony before the Knesset Labour Committee, Hammer noted there was a mass departure of social workers from their profession just at the time when they were most needed. He added that a mere 40 per cent of university graduates with degrees in social work enter the field. One of the major reasons for this, he believes, is the relatively low pay.

In a reply to an agenda motion proposal by MK Menahem Yehudi of the Likud, Hammer said his ministry was now in the midst of a "deep and dynamic campaign" to improve services to the mentally handicapped.

He reported that while two private institutions for the handicapped have already been closed down for improper services, construction of two new ones — in Dimona and Tel Mond — has already been completed and 400 persons waiting for placement will be accommodated by the end of this year.

Jerusalem Post Correspondent A delegation of five Knesset members left yesterday for Switzerland at the invitation of the Swiss Parliament. The delegation, headed by Moshe Carmel (Alignment), included his party colleague Haim Shilon, plus Meir Cohen and Yedidia Be'er of the Likud and Hillel Seidel of the Independent Liberals. Yehoshua Rabinowitz.

Call for Abie to pay taxes on Voice of Peace

Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter

Abie Nathan's Voice of Peace seaborne radio station should pay income tax and royalties to the Treasury, because the Peace Ship is anchored inside Israeli territorial waters, Zalman Shoval (Likud) said yesterday in a parliamentary question tabled to Finance Minister Yehoshua Rabinowitz.

Nathan should pay tax on his present profits, and the tax collection should be started before he introduces television casts, Shoval urged.

In another tabled question, Shulamit Aloni (CRM) charged that senior police officers and customs officers at Ben-Gurion Airport got free plane tickets from El Al and other airlines. She asked Police Minister Shlomo Hillel whether he knew of this, and asked whether the police had reminded all government departments about the ban on giving presents to civil servants.

Aloni asked Justice Minister Haim Zadok whether the Attorney-General had received from the police the names of those senior civil servants who get presents regularly from state corporations. Aloni said the police revealed this practice in a press conference on June 8.

The board approved the proposed budget for next year at IL250m., but noted with concern the projected IL5m. deficit it contained (with another IL1m. deficit in the medical school budget). They called on the Government to cover the deficits and also urged a big fund-raising effort by Technion societies. Evelyn de Rothschild was re-elected chairman of the board for another year.

Navy rescues crew of sunk Greek ship

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — An Israeli Navy patrol boat rescued the eight-man crew, including two Egyptians and a Sudanese, from a Greek merchant ship that sank off the southern Israel coast on Tuesday night.

The 700-ton ship Nicolaus K., carrying a cargo of paper from Limassol, Cyprus, to Akaba via the Suez Canal, sank after her engine failed. The Israeli vessel rescued the crewmen from a lifeboat about 25 km. west of Tel Aviv and took them to Haifa. Officials here said the crew, which also included four Greeks and a Cypriot, would be returned to Greece aboard the s.s. Apollonia, which sails from here tonight.

Seamen told to stay put on Maritime ships

HAIFA. — The Seamen's Unions — both officers and ratings — yesterday ordered crews aboard Israel-flag ships of the Maritime Fruit Carriers company which have been attached in foreign ports to resist any attempts by the authorities to force them off at the request of creditors.

The unions said the faltering company owes the crews over $3m. in back pay, fringe benefits and severance pay. Earlier this week the officers threatened to call a general strike in the merchant marine if the Government failed to back the seamen.

Knesset Member Marda Freedman parries the thrust of an unidentified gynaecologist who tried to throw a pitcher of water at her (and succeeded shortly later — pitcher and all). Freedman led a demonstration of 11 feminists who broke into the national convention of the Society of Gynaecologists and Obstetricians at the Tel Aviv Hilton yesterday carrying signs accusing the doctors of making money on illegal abortions. The women were forced out of the hall by conference organizers, one of whom also hit photographer Carol Gooter with her own flash gun. All 11 were detained by police and later released. (Israeli feminists were angered by the gynaecologists' opposition to a bill that would liberalize abortion.)

Police irked at leak of rackets report

By ARTHUR KEMELMAN

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Police yesterday indirectly accused the Knesset Interior Committee of leaking their investigation into protection rackets in Tel Aviv and around the country.

The accusation followed revelations in the evening papers of testimony a senior police official recently gave committee members about the extent of protection racketeering. The report had been off the record, a police source said yesterday, after the papers came out. Only police officials and Knesset members had been present at the session — and it was not the policemen who leaked the story, he stressed.

According to the newspaper reports, the police official had said they have received information of 178 instances of extortion, threats and demands for protection money made between January and May. Furthermore, 80 fires during these months were believed to be connected with attempts at extortion. Rackets in Tel Aviv's Carmel Market figured prominently in the police official's reported testimony. It was claimed that a stall-owner there must pay racketeers IL35,000 a year to stay in business. Included in the report is information suggesting that one extortionist has become a millionaire through his strong-arm activities.

Asked about the report, a police source said yesterday that a special police unit has been investigating protection rackets for the past six months. Most of the information conveyed to the Interior Committee according to this source, is valid but not strong enough to bring suspected extortionists before a court. The source explained that many victims fear they will put their lives or property in danger if they testify.

It is believed that many of those who have approached the police received promises of utmost secrecy; they are expected to be much more hesitant now because of the police report to the Knesset committee and its subsequent publication.

According to the police year book, there was a 36.1 per cent increase in crimes of extortion last year — from 133 cases in 1974 to 181 cases in 1975. The increase this year is even sharper: the number of cases under investigation in the first four months of 1976 is almost equal to the whole number of cases in 1975.

Harvey Prizes awarded

By YA'ACOV FRIEDLER

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — President Ephraim Katzir last night awarded the fourth annual Harvey Prizes to Prof. Herman Mark and Prof. Saul Lieberman at a ceremony marking the 50th anniversary of the Technion Board of Governors.

Prof. Mark, dean emeritus of the Polytechnic Institute of Brooklyn, was honoured for his contributions to polymer science and technology and for his role in applying research results to practical industrial use. Prof. Lieberman, rector of the Jewish Theological Seminary in New York, was honoured for his investigations of Eastern Mediterranean peoples during the Hellenistic and Roman periods and his research in Talmudic literature and of Talmudic times. Each prize is worth $35,000.

Katzir expressed the hope that the dream would soon come true of the founder of the prize, the late Leo Harvey — that nations would no longer be valued by the size of their armies but by their contributions to the betterment of man. "Unfortunately, we still cannot award a prize for the advancement of peace in the Middle East, as Harvey had provided; but I do hope the time will come when this is possible," the President said.

The Board of Governors ended their meeting with a call to the Council for Higher Education to recognize the Technion's unique role in the country and to afford it the necessary funding priorities.

The board approved the proposed budget for next year at IL250m., but noted with concern the projected IL5m. deficit it contained (with another IL1m. deficit in the medical school budget). They called on the Government to cover the deficits and also urged a big fund-raising effort by Technion societies. Evelyn de Rothschild was re-elected chairman of the board for another year.

Kaplan Prizes for efficiency given out

The 23rd annual Kaplan Prize for efficient management and production was awarded to 12 persons and institutions at a ceremony held at the Jerusalem Theatre in the Capital yesterday.

Participating in the ceremony were Labour Minister Moshe Baran; Mayor Teddy Kollek; Deborah Kaplan, widow of Israel's first Finance Minister Eliezer Kaplan, after whom the annual prize was named; heads of the Productivity Institute and representatives of the Histadrut and the Manufacturers' Association. Among this year's recipients were the Jerusalem Municipality for its city administration to be cited for efficiency; the field crop team at Kibbutz Ramat David, which broke the world record cotton yield; and the personnel on immigrant absorption at Rogozin Industries, Ashdod, who developed new methods in training immigrants at the plant.

Egypt invades TV screens

If you see Turkey when you tune your TV set to Israel, try one of the country's UHF (higher frequency) channels, the Communications Ministry said yesterday.

Explaining the recent interference with local TV from stations in Egypt, Jordan and Turkey, the Ministry said this was due to special climatic conditions now holding in the Eastern Mediterranean. It added that the interference is mutual: Israel TV has been picked up recently in Austria.

The UHF channels to tune to if you experience interference are (in the Jerusalem area) 56, (Tel Aviv) 27, (Haifa) 46, 24, 30, or 53.

30th anniversary of 'Black Saturday'

HAIFA. — The 30th anniversary of "Black Saturday," when British troops imprisoned leaders of the Jewish Yishuv and conducted vigorous arms searches in many kibbutzim, will be marked at Kibbutz Yagur next week. (A large store of arms belonging to the Hagana was uncovered at Yagur, near here.)

Two events will mark the occasion. Next Tuesday, all mail leaving Yagur will be cancelled with a special postmark. The following Friday, an evening of "reminiscences" will be held with poet Haim Guri, who was a member of the Hagana's Palmah striking force, whose blowing up all the bridges on the borders of Palestine on June 17, 1946, had stung the British into their reprisal actions.

7 DAYS TO VAT

How deductions work

Jerusalem Post Economic Reporter According to the regulations governing Value Added Tax, to start on July 1, a dealer can deduct the tax he has paid on his inputs from the tax he collects from his customers. The difference is paid to the Treasury.

This privilege is granted to every dealer, registered or not. However, the businessman who is registered has two advantages:

- He can issue tax bills that can be used by his buyers to deduct the tax they paid from what they pay to the Treasury. Many buyers thus have an interest in doing business only with authorized dealers.

- If he is registered, he has to keep books. Thus his revenues are legally recorded and cannot be questioned by the VAT authorities. If the dealer is not registered, he cannot prove his revenues (including the VAT he collected from his customers). In this case the authorities can arbitrarily fix his revenues and the amount of tax he collected from his customers.

But not everyone can deduct all VAT payments he has put out from what he owes the Treasury.

Non-profit institutions cannot deduct the tax they paid on their inputs; they will have to pay a 3 per cent tax on their wage bill regardless of the taxes they paid on inputs.

The same applies to financial bodies, which will pay a 6 per cent tax on their total wage bill and their profits. The commercial banks, which are included in this group, will have to pay the tax as of January 1976 — seven months earlier than others.

No businessman will be able to deduct taxes paid on the following transactions:

- VAT paid on the purchase of a car, even if the car is used for business.
- VAT paid to buy an apartment which is used both as living quarters and for business (for instance, a doctor who uses his apartment as a clinic).
- VAT paid on entertainment expenses, not including the entertainment of a foreign guest.

Usually VAT is imposed on the sale price. In the case of art objects, however, the ruling is different:

- If the art object (say, a painting) is bought from a private person — that is, one who does not deal in the sale of art objects, then no VAT is to be paid.
- If the art object is bought through a dealer (for instance, an art gallery), VAT of 8 per cent will be paid on the difference between the retail price and the price the dealer paid for it.
- If the art dealer only charges a commission, then he will pay VAT on this commission.

VAT ON CARS

The above regulations apply also to the purchase of cars. For a new car, the full rate of VAT will be paid. For second-hand cars bought from a private person, no VAT will be charged. VAT on used cars bought from a dealer will be charged either on the commission he receives or on the difference between what he got and what he paid.

Olim get one-month reprieve

By JUDY SEGEL

Jerusalem Post Reporter

The prices of immigrant flats purchased through the Absorption Ministry until August 1 will be the same as they were in June — even though they will include VAT.

This decision, just reached by the directors-general of the Absorption and Housing Ministries (apparently with the approval of the Treasury), weeks immigrants in three categories: those who couldn't buy a flat before July 1 because of delays caused by others; those who received official authorization to move in but have not yet been handed the keys; and those who have moved in but have not yet become the official owners.

Ordinarily, the prices of Amidar and Amigur flats (these two public companies build immigrant flats for the Absorption Ministry) are raised in January and June according to increases in the Building Price Index. Under the joint ministry agreement, the flat prices won't go up until August 1, and the VAT on them will be absorbed by the Government.

From then through the end of 1976, the prices will remain stable. Officials have not yet decided what will occur in 1977.

Amidar and Amigur will be instructed on the regulations in the next few days, and immigrants with requests should turn to them only from July 1.

Ministerial responsibility

BEN-GURION AIRPORT. — Security officers had already broken into the suspicious Peugeot parked illegally in front of the VIP lounge here yesterday when its owner appeared — Minister without Portfolio Yisrael Galili.

The car, which bore ordinary civilian plates, had aroused suspicion on both security and parking grounds. When there was no response to two paging calls made over the terminal's public-address system, the security men decided to tow it away. They were inside the car when the minister, who had gone inside the great private visitors' area, appeared. He reportedly listened with understanding as they explained that there are standing orders to remove any unoccupied parked car from the area. (Itim)

HUNDREDS of summer visitors from neighbouring countries, as well as many Arabs working in Europe, are arriving at Ben-Gurion Airport to visit relatives and friends in Israel and the areas. The airport's security service is over-extended as a result, and long queues are forming at the security checkpoints.

Repairs ordered for Moslem Qtr. of Jerusalem

Jerusalem Post Reporter Foundation and sewer repairs to prevent buildings from collapsing in the Moslem Quarter of the Old City of Jerusalem were authorized yesterday by the Ministerial Committee on Jerusalem.

Justice Minister Haim Zook, who is the committee chairman, will consult with the Finance Minister and with Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek on how the repairs will be financed and when they will be completed.

The committee noted that many of the quarter's back-to-the-Turkish period and that leakage of sewage have weakened the foundations of buildings. The building foundations, in addition, have been undermined by traffic through the Old City and by construction work in the Jewish Quarter. Many of the houses in the Moslem Quarter — decades and even centuries old — were neglected under Jordanian rule.

It is estimated that the most urgent repairs will cost about IL20m.

AGAINST GREATER SYRIA! FOR A NEW, BOLD POLICY!

Recognizing that the Palestinian problem is the heart of the conflict between Israel and the Arab world; and recognizing that the only way to solve the conflict is to grant the Palestinian people the right to self-determination and the establishment of its own independent state alongside Israel, on the basis of mutual recognition and peaceful coexistence;

The Israeli Council for Israeli-Palestinian Peace believes that a policy of indirect support for the Syrian invasion of Lebanon would be short-sighted.

It would be a dangerous illusion on the part of the government and people of Israel to think that Syrian domination of Lebanon can advance the cause of peace with the Arabs.

A Syrian victory could only bring about the creation of a "Greater Syria," which would encircle Israel, but would not solve the basic problem which gave birth to the independent Palestinian national movement.

Now is the time for the Israeli government to adopt a new, bold policy, to extend its hand to the Palestinian people and to declare its willingness to recognize the right of the Palestinians to self-determination and to a state of their own, if they recognize Israel, on the basis of peaceful coexistence.

'Trim expenses of delegations abroad'

Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter
Israel must make up its mind to face the Arabs at international conferences such as Vancouver — or abandon the field and leave the Arabs in control, Interior Minister Yosef Burg told the Knesset yesterday. He was replying to a motion for the agenda by Gideon Patt (Likud) which was voted to the Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee.

Burg said that although the Vancouver delegation at the Habitat conference numbered 17 officials, only six came from Israel. The rest were diplomats stationed in North America, or others present there for various purposes such as sabbatical years.

Noting that the annual sums spent on sending official delegations abroad came to IL$6m, Patt said that delegations must be drastically trimmed in future. The committee approving officials' trips abroad must include public figures and must be chaired by a judge, instead of having officials approving trips for their colleagues.

Patt said 20 delegates were planning to go to Puerto Rico shortly for a conference of social workers. Ministers should be prohibited from taking their personal political advisers with them and thus granting them material favours from the public exchequer, he added.

Also at yesterday's session, the Knesset voted to the Education Committee a motion by Aharon Efrat (Alignment-Mapam) about the lack of minimal physical facilities in the Arab school system. Efrat said that as many as 4,000 new classrooms needed to be built urgently. He said drop-outs in the Arab school system were as many as 40 per cent, as against 8 per cent in Jewish schools.

Replying, Education Minister

Aharon Yadlin said a five-year plan to improve Arab schools would be launched this year. One thousand classrooms had been built for Arabs in the past four years, Yadlin said.

The Knesset also voted to committee a motion by Yigal Cohen (Likud) complaining about the steady rise in the number of service employees — and the steady fall in the number of production workers — in this country. Cohen outlined several measures whereby departments could be merged and duplication eliminated, so as to reduce the number of service workers.

The Knesset voted to committee another motion criticizing wasteful duplication, by Ora Namir (Alignment) — this time in the departments handling children below school age. She said the Education, Welfare and Labour Committees were all involved, all hampering one another, and none cooperating.

It sent to committee a private member's bill by Aharon Abu Hatzira (NRP) whereby a suspect whose interrogation is completed can be released by a senior police officer without needing to wait for a court order for his release, as at present. Justice Minister Haim Zadok agreed that the bill merited consideration.

Interior Minister Burg announced that the Government was preparing an amendment to the Citizenship Law, whereby Arab residents here in May 1948, who fled and later returned surreptitiously, would be able to apply for citizenship. He was replying to a private member's bill on the same subject by Tawfik Toubi (New Communists). Burg got the Knesset to strike Toubi's bill off the agenda because of its political overtones, but said Toubi's idea resembled the Government's proposal anyway.

MKs charge 'bankruptcy' in population dispersal

By AARON SEITNER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Two Labour MKs yesterday took issue with a fellow party member — Minister of Commerce and Industry Haim Bar-Lev — over the issue of official encouragement of settling the development towns.

According to MKs Yosef Sarid (Kiryat Shmona) and Jacques Amir (Dimona) the Government has "gone bankrupt" in its stated policy of dispersing the population by helping persons move to development towns.

Citing a survey by the Absorption Ministry's research department, the two said that in 1974 some 15,800 persons moved to development towns while 20,900 left them. This, they said, was the continuation of a trend noted in 1972 and 1973. What is more, the net population deficit in 1974 was reflected in every development town throughout the country.

"This proves," said Sarid and Amir in a press statement, "that all this talk about population dispersal is just that — talk. The Government has gone bankrupt in its policy."

"The handful of Israelis who want to settle in development towns are up against an impossible situation. Only a stubborn, lucky few succeed in surviving the 'Via Dolorosa' leading through the bureaucratic mire, the obdurate indifference found among Government officials who are supposed to be helping them."

To remedy this situation, the two MKs proposed a five-year ban on all Government and public investment in the centre of the country. Only if all these funds — for housing and industry — are pumped exclusively into the development towns will there be a significant movement towards these places and a chance for true population dispersal, they said.

In his reply, Minister Bar-Lev dismissed the Absorption Ministry's survey, as cited by the two MKs, as misleading. He pointed to a population report by the Central Bureau of Statistics which said that the population of the 13 development towns in Galilee had actually increased — by 0.7 per cent — from 172,760 in 1973 to 173,890 a year later.

The 1973-1974 population growth in all of the country's 25 development towns as a group was 2 per cent, Bar-Lev added — the same rate at which the general Jewish population of Israel increased.

Minister Bar-Lev agreed that the plenum should discuss the matter at a future sitting.

Twelve persons were injured, one seriously, in this accident which occurred at 7.20 a.m. yesterday at the Mamilla-Agron-King David intersection in Jerusalem. A cement mixer collided head on with a light pickup van transporting labourers. The traffic light was not working at the time. (Rahamim Yisraeli)

Knesset defeats 'Hausner Bill' on civil marriage and divorce

By ASHER WALLFISH
Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter

The Knesset yesterday struck off its agenda, by a vote of 51 to 18, an Independent Liberal Party private member's bill providing a form of civil marriage for Jews who are forbidden to marry in this country by Halachic disqualifications applied in the rabbinical courts.

(The bill is still nicknamed the "Hausner Bill" although Minister without Portfolio Gideon Hausner is no longer a signatory to it, having given up his Knesset seat when he joined the Cabinet.)

Justice Minister Haim Zadok, replying to the bill, said that ever since the law on marriage and divorce was enacted in 1953, the basic policy platforms and the coalition agreements in successive governments, including the present one, had stipulated that the status quo must be preserved in matters of marriage and divorce. The present coalition agreement even mentioned the Hausner Law by name.

Zadok said he would not go into the essence of the law, although many non-Orthodox Jews who favoured a legislative solution for Jews forbidden from marrying did not accept the ILP bill.

The Government wanted the ILP bill struck down, he said, because in public life, keeping agreements and commitments was a fundamental principle.

The minister said that the public was entitled to expect that the rabbinical courts remember they derive their authority from the Knesset. This authority covers the entire Jewish community here, Orthodox and secular alike, with all its shades of opinion and patterns of life. The public is entitled to expect the rabbinical courts, within the context of Jewish law, to find solutions for their problems in the sphere of family law — in harmony with the accepted principles and values of the majority of Israelis.

"In the long run it is impossible to leave unsolved problems of personal status, which cause difficulties and suffering to Jewish men and women in Israel, preventing them from building a family or placing obstacles in their way," Zadok said.

The ILP's Yehuda Sha'ari, presenting the bill on behalf of the four-man faction, said that solutions had not been found to the marriage problem because the rabbinical establishment had remained immobile over the years. Although Ashkenazi Chief Rabbi Shlomo Goren had tried to find solutions for individuals, it was impossible to depend on the goodwill of one rabbi or another.

Sha'ari said his bill would only apply after the rabbi had refused to give a couple. It would apply only to Jews and hence could not encourage mixed marriages. It would obviate the need for Jews to travel abroad to marry — to Cyprus for instance — after which their marriages were recognized here anyway.

He quoted the late Supreme Court Justice Moshe Silberg, an Orthodox Jew, as approving the Hausner Law publicly in press interviews, and as assuring that it would not create a new class of "untouchables," Silberg said the bill did not clash with Halacha in any way.

Nowadays, Sha'ari said, marriage problems are treated in a cynical and hypocritical manner. Sending people abroad to marry is no solution, and in any case not everyone can afford it. The ILP bill does not upset the Halacha, although it does upset the Orthodox rabbinate's monopoly on marriage.

The 18 votes for the bill came from the ILP, Mapam, a few Liberals in the Likud, part of the La'am wing of the Likud, the Citizens Rights Movement, the New Communists, the Independent Socialists, Moked and Independent Binyamin Halevi.

Voting against were the National Religious Party, the Aguda Bloc, the Herut wing of the Likud, and the Labour wing of the Alignment, which thus conformed with its commitment to the NRP under the coalition agreement.

However, one Labour man, Adi Amora, abstained and was allowed, after a noisy procedural wrangle, to explain his abstention from the vote. While he did not favour the ILP proposal, Amora said, the problem still existed and some legal solution was sorely needed.

Three other Labour members who wanted to abstain but were denied permission by their party slipped out before the vote. These were Esther Heritz, Yosef Sarid and Yitzhak Ben-Aharon.

A large number of the Liberals in the Likud were absent throughout. The three NRP and two ILP ministers were present, as interested parties, and Zadok was supported at the Cabinet table by Labour Minister Moshe Baran and Education Minister Aharon Yadlin. (Leader — Page 8)

Burg raps trial use of voting machines

By ASHER WALLFISH
Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter

The plan to introduce voting machines in the 1977 Knesset elections on a trial basis has sparked a clash between the Central Knesset Elections Committee, which backs the idea, and the Interior Ministry, which supervises the election arrangements.

Interior Minister Yosef Burg, appearing in the Law Committee yesterday, said that if some polling stations had machines and others did not, this would offend the principle of equal elections. Burg said it would mean spending unnecessary amounts of foreign currency to buy the voting machines.

Burg said he opposed the idea because elections were no proper opportunity for experiments. Machines were not used in any of the European democracies, and in the United States they were only used in a few places.

(The Post learns that voting machines are widely used in New York and all over the U.S., however.)

Burg said machines were not needed for quick counting because in any case the law left seven days in which to announce the results.

The Law Committee has before it a private members' bill calling to introduce a few voting machines in the next elections on a trial basis, suggested in IDF polling stations. Members of five factions, including Burg's own NRP, sponsored the bill.

The Central Elections Committee has received two sample machines free from the U.S. makers and has carried out some experiments already. Next month it will carry out a big trial run in an IDF camp, and the proceedings will be filmed for showing to officials and MKs before they discuss the matter further.

The machines would cost some IL$600-IL$700 each. The Elections Committee has calculated that if the machines are used all over the IDF, they will cost no more than the present system, which is very expensive because of the complicated "double envelope" procedure. In one election, it is claimed, the machines will cover their cost. Fifty per cent of the budget would be saved by using the machines in civilian stations, it is claimed.

The machines envisaged are the simplest type: all mechanical with no electrical parts.

The Elections Committee was under the impression when the bill was first read a few months ago that Burg was in favour, and was later swayed by his officials.

100 may lose jobs in Kiryat Shmona

KIRYAT SHMONA — Solel Boneh intends to dismiss 100 construction workers because of the building slump here. The labour council has appealed to the secretary of Ezerat Ha'ovdim, Efraim Reiner, to prevail on Hamashbir Latzarchan to entrust the construction of its planned supermarket here to Solel Boneh, and thus enable it to keep its skilled workers employed.

JEWISH DOCTORS in history is the topic of an exhibit which opened Tuesday in the library of the Madassah-Hebrew University Medical Centre in Jerusalem. The exhibit, consisting of books, photographs and wall displays, shows the impact Jews made on medicine in the Middle Ages and the hostility this aroused; it will remain open through July.

J'lem Arabs protest boycott leaflets

Arab merchants in East Jerusalem have protested against the circulation of leaflets — allegedly by members of Rabbi Meir Kahane's "Kach" group — which urged tourists not to buy from Arab shops.

The protest was sent yesterday to Tourism Minister Moshe Kol, Mayor Teddy Kolek and the chief of the Jerusalem police by the East Jerusalem Chamber of Commerce. Police sources said that three persons suspected of distributing the leaflets on behalf of Kach are being held.

Lebanese Moslems now flocking to IDF clinics

By YORAM HAMZARAH
Jerusalem Post Reporter

METULLA — The news that the Israel Defence Forces are now giving medical treatment to Moslems as well as Christians is spreading like wildfire throughout the border villages in southern Lebanon, a Lebanese driver told The Jerusalem Post here yesterday.

More than 50 Lebanese civilians — most of them Moslems — were yesterday treated at the IDF clinic here, as compared with a previous daily average of about 35. Army authorities have improved facilities, bringing in more beds and equipment. They have also enlarged the opening in the barbed wire security fence through which the Lebanese enter and leave.

One Lebanese taxi driver who brought out-patients to the clinic said that business was so good that he has opened a regular taxi service between Metulla and villages up to 20 kilometres away.

At least two of yesterday's patients were hospitalized in Israel for further treatment, it was learned.

The army's chief medical officer, Tat-Ahuf Dan Michaeli, yesterday inspected the clinic and observed the treatment given the villagers.

Former Galilee Arabs said killed in Beirut

By YOEL DAB
Jerusalem Post Reporter

SHFARAM — A former resident of this town, Nadim Saibak, and his wife and daughter have been murdered in their home in Beirut by Palestinian terrorists, according to news received by the family's relatives here via New York. Saibak, a well-to-do Christian, left with his family in 1954 to join his relatives in Lebanon. Because he was well connected with all groups involved in the civil war, he stayed put, expecting to survive unscathed. At the beginning of this month a group of terrorists sought him out, killing him together with his wife and daughter.

This report is one of many. A large number of Galilee Arabs with relatives in Lebanon have been informed of deaths of family members as a result of the Lebanese conflict.

At first Christian residents here who received news of the deaths of family members let out that they had died of illness. With the number of deaths rising, however, the true cause is no longer concealed.

Meanwhile, Israel's Moslems are continuing their aid fund drive for Lebanese war victims and claim to have amassed a sum of IL$200,000. The drive's committee is awaiting word from the Prime Minister's Office on sending relief supplies to Lebanon by way of Rosh Hanikra.

Israel, Jordan economically non-viable — U.S. ex-envoy

By WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON — U.S. special envoy L. Dean Brown says that Israel is an economically non-viable state which could not exist without foreign aid.

Answering questions on Tuesday night at a Middle East Institute meeting held at the Brookings Institution here, Brown claimed that Jordan was also an economically non-viable state.

The subject of viable or non-viable states in the Middle East arose when Brown, who recently was dispatched to Lebanon by President Ford to report on the conflict there, insisted that there should be no partition of Lebanon into separate Christian and Moslem states. He said that such a Christian state would be composed primarily of "old Maronites... we already have enough non-viable states in that region."

Asked to explain which states were non-viable, he replied, "Jordan and Israel." Later, in response to another question, he added that he was referring only to their "economic" viability, and their dependence on foreign aid.

Brown, who retired from the U.S. foreign service last year and is now a private citizen, occasionally called on by the government to act as a Middle East "trouble-shooter," noted, nevertheless, that a solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict should include a withdrawal by Israel to the pre-1967 borders and the establishment of a Palestinian state in "the West Bank and Gaza Strip." He implied such a state would be viable.

Brown is a former U.S. ambassador in Amman and served there during the September 1970 civil war. A State Department official pointed out that Brown was expressing his "personal opinions" and not official U.S. policy. He declined to comment on the substance of Brown's remarks.

Brown said that there can be no solution to the Lebanese conflict until a solution to the Palestinian question "is perceived." He explained that the Palestinians in Lebanon must have a minimal amount of hope of having their own state before something can be worked out in Lebanon.

Brown, who was in Israel earlier this month and met with top Israel officials in Jerusalem, said that Israel has no intention to intervene in Lebanon. He said that the "Israelis were basically happy" over the situation in Lebanon and not "overly concerned." He said that this Israel assessment was "short-sighted."

Battle against inflation unites Western nations

PARIS. — Leading Western industrial countries agreed Tuesday to co-operate in fighting inflation by holding down economic expansion to about five per cent a year for the next five years.

The decision by finance ministers from the 24-nation Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) came after stern warnings from some ministers that high inflation threatened to undermine Western society.

Said U.S. Treasury Secretary William Simon: "Inflation should be identified for what it is — the cruellest hoax ever perpetrated for the expedient purposes of a few at the cost of many."

The agreement is aimed at creating a new era of steady, controlled growth to replace the boom-and-bust cycles which have marked the Western economic system since World War II. The ministers also agreed to renew for another year their two-year-old pact to avoid restrictive trade practices.

The warnings on inflation reflected concern over a new wave of price increases in some industrial countries, including France, Italy, Spain and Japan. Unrestrained growth rates can foster inflation through an excessive rise in consumer and industrial demand.

The agreed five per cent average growth rate for the OECD area until 1980 is about the same as the current rate. But some countries, notably the U.S. and France, have been experiencing growth at a much faster rate as they pulled out of last year's recession.

Babi Yar pillar; Jews not noted

MOSCOW. — The Soviet Union has erected a 15 metre-high monument to the Nazi victims of Babi Yar in the Ukraine. The commemorative plaque, however, makes no special mention of Jews, according to press reports yesterday.

Soviet Jews have charged that the authorities were unwilling to acknowledge the weight of German atrocities against them — some 100,000 Jews slaughtered at the spot — and that only in 1966 was a simple stone slab erected at Babi Yar, mentioning "Soviet citizens."

A year ago government officials promised a full-scale monument would be built. (UPI)

Mauthausen memorial

MAUTHAUSEN, Austria. — A memorial honouring the six million Jewish victims of the Nazi holocaust was unveiled in former concentration camp Mauthausen this week.

The ceremony was attended by former concentration camp inmates and representatives of the Austrian Government, including Justice Minister Christian Broda and Interior Minister Otto Zoesch. (JTA)

Pan Am cars firebombed

NEW YORK. — Two Pan American Airways vehicles were firebombed at Kennedy Airport early yesterday. No injuries were reported.

A male caller to United Press International and other news media said the firebombing was done by members of the Dov Gruner Strike Unit of the Jewish Armed Resistance, an offshoot of the Jewish Defence League. "Pan Am serves as the cargo agent for the Soviet Aeroflot Airlines," the caller said. "We warn all decent Americans to stay away from Soviet buildings and to stop engaging in trade with Soviet agencies." He added "never again" — a favourite slogan of the JDL — and hung up. (UPI)

ILO ends meet without split

GENEVA. — The greatest achievement of the International Labour Organization (ILO) at its annual conference here was that it avoided breaking up, Chairman Michael O'Leary told the closing session on Tuesday.

Last November the U.S. began proceedings to withdraw from the 132-state organization, saying it was turning increasingly into a political forum.

The U.S. strongly opposed a decision to seat the Palestine Liberation Organization at an ILO sponsored world employment conference run in parallel with the annual assembly, and walked out whenever PLO delegates spoke. (Reuters)

'Wimbledonmania' strikes again

LONDON. — "Wimbledonmania" is again gripping Britain, as the papers here fill column after column with reports of the on and off-court activities of the leading players, and the sun blazes down for the world's most prestigious tennis championships.

After last week's tremendous buildup to the Wimbledon fortnight — top-seeded girl Chris Evert's new short hair style and her ex-boy friend Jimmy Connors' current romance with a former miss world — were front-page stories — television and radio are now each devoting some five hours of coverage a day to these 90th annual championships.

All signs point to the attendance for the 12 days of tennis exceeding last year's record of 338,000. (One record was already broken before a ball was hit, with the announcement that this year's prize money amounts to a sum of nearly £160,000, but nevertheless Women's Tennis Association president Evert warned on Tuesday that most top girl players will boycott Wimbledon in 1977 unless they get the same prize money as the men.)

Connors was interested to hear about the progress of the recently-opened Israel Tennis Centre at Ramat Hasharon, to which he paid $1,500 for life membership. He said that he looked forward both to seeing the centre and playing there at the earliest opportunity.

Most of the experts tip Connors as most likely to succeed this year. Ashe, now nearly 33, had hardly the air of a champion in his two opening singles. This follows his rather indifferent form of recent weeks and there is a feeling

Azevedo suffers heart attack

OPORTO, Portugal. — Premier Jose Pinheiro de Azevedo was in extremely serious condition in an Oporto hospital yesterday after suffering a heart attack during his campaign for the presidency in Sunday's elections.

Azevedo's motorcade had just left Oporto's town hall for another campaign appearance when he reportedly felt sudden chest pains. If the Prime Minister were to abandon the campaign, the presidential race would be between army chief Gen. Antonio Ramalho Eanes, Communist Central Committee member Octavio Pato and far left ex-military security chief Maj. Otelio Saraiva de Carvalho.

The electoral law also stipulates that if a candidate dies, the whole presidential race starts again from the beginning. The current President, Gen. Francisco da Costa Gomes, would have to set a new date within 48 hours of the death of one of the candidates.

Meanwhile, American officials announced that the U.S. has resumed shipping arms to Portugal after a 10-year moratorium. (Reuters, UPI)

Giscard calls for closer ties between London and Paris

LONDON. — French President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing yesterday called on Britain to cooperate with France and their other Common Market partners to make the presence of Europe felt on the world political scene.

He pleaded for "a peaceful presence but a strong one, with the kind of experience that can help to overcome crises, ease tensions and express the vitality of democratic institutions."

The President, who arrived here on a four-day state visit on Tuesday, said in an address to both Houses of Parliament that the similarity of Anglo-French ambitions, which in the past had caused rivalry, could help the European community progress in two areas — the organization of Europe and the definition of its international role.

He suggested that Britain and France hold a regular annual summit meeting and have a programme of political consultations at foreign ministers' level and other contacts between officials of the two governments. (Reuters)

U.S. Zionist leader Sage dies

NEW YORK. — Rabbi Maurice for Sage's life as others on the stage tried to revive him. Mrs. Ford was guest of honour at the dinner at which 2,500 guests paid $300 each to raise cash for an American bicentennial park in Israel.

Sage, 56, a recently elected president of the Jewish National Fund of America, was pronounced dead at the French Polyclinic hospital apparently of a heart attack.

Hanoi aglow for reunification

BANGKOK. — Flags, posters and arches are adorning the streets of Hanoi and millions of fluorescent lights have turned night into day in preparation for the first session today of Vietnam's National Assembly, Hanoi Radio said yesterday.

The radio said all 492 deputies, elected on April 25, had arrived in Hanoi for the session, which is expected to formalize the reunification of North and South Vietnam.

On Tuesday the leaders of the provisional revolutionary government of South Vietnam laid wreaths in the mausoleum of former North Vietnamese President Ho Chi Minh. The wreaths said: "Gratefulness forever to the great Uncle Ho."

The length of the first session hasn't been announced, but the agenda will reportedly include setting up an administrative machinery for a unified country, selecting a national flag, anthem and capital, and dealing with resisting elements of the fallen U.S.-backed Saigon regime.

While most observers note that the meeting will have great symbolic significance, they consider the assembly little more than a rubber-stamp body for Vietnam's Lao Dong Party. (AP)

Colombia ends state of siege

BOGOTA. — The government on Tuesday lifted the state of siege, saying Colombia had returned to normalcy after nearly a year under the special decrees.

The state of siege had been imposed on June 26, 1975, to put an end to a wave of kidnappings, step up the drive against guerrilla movements and deal with the growing drug traffic.

The end of the emergency measures came as a surprise since kidnappings have continued throughout the year and guerrilla activity has increased. Earlier on Tuesday a guerrilla group ambushed an army patrol in the central Magdalena Valley, killing one soldier and wounding several others.

Although Colombia authorities have increased seizures of drugs, especially cocaine, throughout the country, no one can claim the problem of Colombia becoming a springboard for South American cocaine has been solved. (UPI)

IN BRIEF

Madrid protest

MADRID. — Police were yesterday still holding 30 persons arrested during anti-government street demonstrations in central Madrid the previous night, Spanish news reports said.

The incidents, during which helmeted riot police fired smoke flares to disperse protesters shouting for liberty and amnesty, came as more than 50,000 Spaniards using newly-won freedoms attended political rallies in Madrid and Barcelona. (UPI)

Teheran terrorists

TEHERAN. — Two terrorists were killed in separate gun battles with security agents in Teheran on Sunday, the government announced here yesterday.

One passer-by was also killed and a security agent was wounded during the battles, the announcement said.

The government said explosives and pamphlets were discovered in the hideout of one of the terrorists. The announcement made no mention of their motives or of groups to which they belonged. (Reuters)

Peron loses rights

BUENOS AIRES. — The Argentine military government stripped 38 prominent Peronist leaders of their political rights yesterday, including ousted President Isabel Peron.

The government said those affected will not be able to vote, run for public office or serve in an official capacity. The list includes former Peronist Presidents Hector Campora and Raul Lastiri, as well as Jose Lopez Rega, who once was Mrs. Peron's closest adviser and confidant. (AP)

Envoy's daughter slain

QUEBEC. — The 18-year-old daughter of Zaire's ambassador to Canada, who was stabbed 17 times in her dormitory room at Laval University, died in a hospital here on Tuesday. Her 26-year-old uncle is being held.

Marthe Ntumbo Tsimblanaga, daughter of Ambassador Shaba Dibne Tsimblanaga, went into a coma after suffering stab wounds of the back and thorax late Friday night. Her uncle, who was charged over the weekend in the case, appeared in court on Tuesday and was remanded for 30 days in undergo psychiatric tests. (AP)

Rumsfeld trip off

WASHINGTON. — U.S. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld has delayed a trip to the Middle East that was tentatively planned for next month, the Defense Department said yesterday.

A spokesman said that because of the press of Pentagon business, including defence-budget decisions, the Secretary decided to postpone the trip to Egypt, Israel, and Saudi Arabia. Rumsfeld, who returned from a visit to Europe and Africa last weekend, was to have left on July 7. (Reuters)

Hot embraces

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates. — A young Kuwaiti has been sentenced to three months in prison for exchanging "hot embraces" with his girl friend on a bench, according to the Kuwait press reaching here on Tuesday.

Jawad J. had offered to marry the girl, to make up for embracing her, but the girl's parents refused. He was condemned for "accosting the girl against her parents' wish," the reports said.

Jawad's case was one of a series of recent arrests to enforce the Islamic code of ethics in Kuwait. (AP)

THE ANCIENT bronze coins discovered at Caesarea are now being cleaned by a simple, inexpensive and highly effective method developed by an American pastor whose archaeological interests have become, in fact, a second profession.

The Rev. Frank R. Ostertag, pastor of the United Methodist Church of Leonia, has been studying the archaeology of coins at the Graduate School of Drew University, Madison, N.J., for several years under the university's director of archaeology, Robert J. Bull. Mr. Bull is also archaeological director of the Joint Expedition to Caesarea Maritima, a consortium of 22 American and Canadian universities, colleges and other institutions which has been digging at Israel's ancient Roman port since 1970.

Working with the expedition, Mr. Ostertag soon realized the need for a better and faster coin-cleaning method, not only because of the corrosive effects of Mediterranean salt water and air, but because of the enormous number of coins being recovered — as many as 2,000 in a single season. The coins date from the Roman period as well as from successive levels of Byzantine, Crusader and Arab occupation.

Mr. Ostertag achieved an initial breakthrough in 1973, with modifications of a method developed by a professor of electro-chemistry at Columbia University nearly half a century ago. The electrolytic apparatus he designed in collaboration with two members of the Columbia faculty softens the corrosion on bronze coins usually within four to six hours. The oxide is then peeled away, leaving the coin either completely clean or requiring only incidental use of dental picks and brushes for datable restoration.

The apparatus uses a small stainless steel pan as an anode and the corroded coins as cathodes, with power supplied by a small battery charger.

Reverend Ostertag cleans up the coins

The rim of the pan is insulated with electrician's tape, over which an aluminium rim is installed. Resting on this rim are three aluminium rods, to each of which eight alligator clips are bolted. These hold the coins in the bath. The rods and rim are electrically connected to each other and to the negative pole of the charger.

The level of the bath, a two per cent solution of sodium hydroxide, is kept as close to the clips as possible by adding tap water as needed.

Chemists say the process apparently robs the oxide of its copper ion. The ion is then re-deposited on the bronze face of the coin in the form of finely divided copper, readily brushed off. So far, at least, the method has not been used successfully on iron artifacts.

With coins replaced as necessary — morning, afternoon, and evening — the compact apparatus can service up to 72 in a single day.

FOR THE MOST PART, says Mr. Ostertag, "bugs" in the system have proved to be relatively minor. Sodium hydroxide crystals developing after about a week on the inside of the pan and on the clips are easily brushed back into solution, though during continuous operation the bath is changed once a week. Coins with greenish oxides tend to clean much more readily than those with bluish oxides, and this requires further investigation.

There is no noticeable deterioration of the metal clips or the bronze coins, but the pan tends to develop holes over several months of use. And although these may be patched with "liquid steel," available in most hardware stores, Mr. Ostertag is experimenting this summer at Caesarea with a glass tank.

A replaceable stainless steel plate lying on the bottom will be wired to serve as the anode, while the glass container will eliminate the need to insulate the aluminium rim and to protect surroundings against leaks.

Of the 776 coins dug and registered during the initial field test at Caesarea in 1974, about a fourth were destroyed by the process because the bronze had been entirely consumed by corrosion, which crumbled away in the bath. The rest of the coins, nearly 75 per cent, retained a bronze core and were cleaned satisfactorily. Of these, 36 per cent were in fair to good condition and datable.

The apparatus has been installed in a new dig house built for the expedition by the nearby resort Kibbutz Beit Yana, where the consortium is based. Seventeen member institutions are represented at this summer's dig, which began May 30 and will continue until August 5.

Assaf Berg, whose illustrations appear frequently in The Jerusalem Post, is having an exhibition of oil paintings at The Little Gallery, Jerusalem. The show opens tonight at 8.30 p.m.

Victorian Women's Lib

OLD ALRESFORD.

By PATRICK O'DONOVAN

THE CENTENARY of the Mothers' Union is being marked this month. The fact that this organisation is regarded, like the Women's Institute ("Jam and Jerusalem"), as a reliable rather than a revolutionary organisation, says little for England and volumes for male chauvinism.

In fact all that is known of its real founding is that it happened in early June in 1876 on a fine hot summer's day. It was done by a rector's wife, a rich, beautiful woman with hair in black ringlets in Old Alresford.

Its intentions and actions were curious, modern and in no way patronising or silly.

Mary Sumner was the rector's wife. Both were rich. The rector was the son of the Bishop of Winchester and ended Bishop of Guildford. She was a banker's daughter.

The village was miserably poor and the women used to work in the fields with the men. Almost all of it has disappeared under a trim municipal modernity. The rectory was reasonably majestic having been built by the Reverend the Earl of Guilford. It stands among trees, tinkling with streams, surrounded by stables. The Summers added a wing for 13 servants and Mrs. Sumner from puberty to death was never without the service of a lady's maid. But she had two daughters and a son and she cared and she saw what happened about her.

Mrs. Sumner was over 50 when she started the Mothers' Union. Oddly her first meeting was not solely for the poor who would have come anyway for the food and the tea. She asked her well-to-do friends because she believed that the mother was the essential person and the nanny, though useful, only a stand-in substitute and a servant.

Unwillingly she spoke at a diocesan meeting, at a time when women rarely spoke in public. And like the great Protestant martyrs, she lit a fire which spread until the Mothers' Union is basically a Christian back-up for the social services. The Union is specifically an Anglican thing, though they would accept a Roman Catholic if such presented herself. They work like consecrated beavers in their parishes. About five years ago they wrenched themselves apart and forced themselves to accept divorced women and the parents of "one parent families." Their essential purpose is the preservation of Christian marriage. In this process they become counsellors and floor scrubbers and social workers and women in a revolutionary organisation of prayer.

Mary Sumner's idea took the Victorians by storm. It was one of the biggest things of its time in women's liberation. Now it is especially successful in places like Africa in dignifying women and making polygamy a squalid practice. (Ofns)

In Memoriam

Passion for perfection

donkey being beaten or a dog kicked. It was while accompanying her pupils on their excursions that Phyllis learned to love this country, its landscape, its wildflowers and its arts and crafts.

When the Second World War broke out she trained as a V.A.D. and nursed wounded soldiers at the Italian

Hospital in Jerusalem. The pre-independence siege of Jerusalem and the War of Independence itself found her again nursing, this time at Hadassah's branch in the Mission Hospital. In this vocation (she had, indeed, wanted to study medicine), her cool competence stood her and her patients in good stead, especially on the occasion when one of them turned out to be her husband.

For the last ten years, she served as chairman of the Ladies' Committee of the Israel Philharmonic.

The selfless devotion of her closest family enabled Phyllis Levin to end her days without any knowledge of her fatal illness. Thus when death came to her, it was with the courtesy and seamliness that marked her life. F.D.

Gala recital by Emanuel Ax, pianist, organised by the Shalom Fund For Young Artists, in honour of the American Bicentennial (Tel Aviv, Museum, June 16)

WE MUST confess that Emanuel Ax, winner of the first prize in the first Arthur Schnitger International Piano Master Competition, disappointed us. There is no doubt he is a marvellous keyboard player, possessing both technique and all the necessary musical prerequisites. With the possible exception of the Mozart, which simply seemed misinterpreted, all the other items were musically sound. But beyond this elementary soundness, there was summer VAT. A "Miss Elegance" will be chosen. Group bookings are doing nicely from such outfits as CLAL and the Stock Exchange, production workers all. The organizers, specialists in fashion shows, are called "Summit," meaning they're the Top in dealing with Beautiful People. The event is not in aid of any worthy cause except that of the organizers.

What all this has to do with the Bicentennial, which the surfeited American press is now referring to as the "B+," or what an "American Midsummer Night's Dream" might be, may be explained by the entertainers during what is called the "artistic programme."

In requesting my distinguished presence and sending me a free ticket, the Top organizers write that "in view of the importance of the evening, you are invited to give appropriate coverage to an event which unquestionably expresses the bonds of friendship between Israel and the United States."

Well, that is a complicated one these days. But with all this exclusivity and Summit and Top, let's remember that the Midsummer Night's Dream belongs to Bottom.

"Bless thee, Bottom! bless thee! Thou art translated." Act III, Scene I. And "it shall be called Bottom's Dream, because it hath no bottom." Act IV, Scene I. Or in Act V, Scene I: "Very tragical mirth." And a few lines later: "That is the true beginning of our end."

My distinguished but sluggish presence has failed to respond to quite a few invitations to excited gatherings even with a free ticket. This time there is a really interesting question. Will they get through the evening without the punch line, "Lord, what fools these mortals be!" Act III, Scene II.

Exercise without being seen

YOU MAY be surprised to learn that it is possible to exercise while sitting or lying almost absolutely still. This kind of exercising, however, is not always the easiest method of reducing. The emphasis is on concentration, rather than on working up a sweat — which, you'll probably find, is almost as exhausting as the tugging-puffing technique.

The advantages of this method are many. You can exercise "clandestinely" on the beach, while driving your car, standing in line at the bus-stop or lying in bed. Stomach exercises of this sort can be done in almost any position. When you get really good at it, you can firm your stomach while doing absolutely anything — even eating. Practice a bit before you try the classic position, on your back with your knees bent. Slowly tighten your lower abdominal muscles as hard as you can, hold to the count of 10 and slowly release. Concentrate on changes in your body and breathing and try to reduce them as much as possible. As you get better at this, try to increase the strength of your hold on your muscles, as well as the time you hold your stomach in. Do this exercise anywhere and everywhere. If you can do it while singing an aria in full voice, I would imagine that you've learned the trick of breathing correctly.

Thigh and bottom exercises can be just as invisible, but require an equal amount of concentration. You should practise them standing up before you experiment with other positions. Stand with your feet apart, upper torso relaxed. Press your knees backward as hard as you can, raise your toes slightly and concentrate on tensing the entire front part of your leg. Hold to the count of 10, relax. In this and succeeding exercises, keep the rest of your body, including the other parts of the leg, relaxed. I know it sounds impossible, but try it anyway. In time you'll find you can do it. This exercise is meant to reduce and firm the front of the thighs.

Stand with your legs together. Press your legs together, especially at the knees and ankles, until you start to feel a tiredness in your inner thighs. Hold to the count of 10, relax. Once you get more proficient, you'll find you can do this exercise lying down or sitting with your legs straight in front of you. Needless to say, this variation is meant to firm and reduce the inner thigh.

Remain standing with your legs together. Tighten up your bottom as hard as you can, and try to increase the area of tension to cover the entire back of the leg. Press the back of your leg toward the front of the room, especially at the knee — but don't actually allow your knees to bend. In this exercise, some tension will be felt in the other parts of the leg, you cannot isolate the back of the leg entirely. This, however, does not hamper the effectiveness of the exercise, whose purpose is to tone and reduce the bottom and the back of the thighs. This exercise is harder to do unobscuredly, but a bit of ingenuity will probably solve the problem for those determined not to take time to exercise. If you like long telephone conversations, you can probably fit it in there.

Now that you've mastered the technique, you might like to know that it (slightly altered) has a name — isometrics. It also works.

Original tenders called for a lightweight aircraft of no more than 12,500 pounds weight. This would have enabled it to meet the U.S. FAA specifications for this category of aircraft.

As a short-takeoff-and-landing (STOL) type, it was primarily intended for the civilian market of undeveloped and developing countries. The Government gave the project its high priority because there was underemployment of local engineers at that time and because it wanted to promote local technologies and know-how.

By 1971 it emerged, however, that at the framework and other essential development work on the aircraft would raise its takeoff weight to 15,000 pounds — a category in the lightweight category. This is invoked not only because of 3 modifications (if FAA specifications were to be met) and, more important, adversely affected the operating/payload/economy of aircraft. It was, therefore, designed to respect the new design of a military version.

Today, the comptroller notes, IAI has been authorized to build 17 aircraft in series, all in the military version. Up to April 1977, only 40 aircraft have been sold. The 20 were delivered as of December 1975.)

Counting the 34 aircraft sold during the report period, the comptroller notes that they grossed the company $329m. while investments in the aircraft up to the end of the fiscal year were £1259m. (This does not include the financing costs.) One-third of the investment sum was used for development of the aircraft. The other two-thirds was "floating."

Mr. Haiman said that it would reach break-even point following production of the 60th aircraft. Losses at some £160m.

The marketing forecast by the IAI, were that if the company were to produce 40 planes for a foreign government, (U.S. Coast Guard), it would be able to build a total of 108 planes for a £152m. profit. Otherwise it would build only 60 aircraft, with the profit reduced to £100m. and a 10% return on production cost investments.

The economic adviser to the Ministry of Defence had his doubts in approving the project because of the high risk factor involved if the deal with the foreign government failed to materialize, as it did — as well as the alternatively low profit span. He approved, however, because the company was otherwise committed to producing the 1124 and had invested considerable sums in it.

The earlier appraisals were reviewed in June 1975 — when the development costs of the 1124 were raised to £160m., compared to the £142m. estimate of nine months earlier, and an additional 13 per cent increase in work-hours requirements. Production time was given as two planes per month of the new series out of 84 aircraft to be manufactured by 1980. At 1975 production costs of the approved aircraft series would amount to £1507m. while sale income would amount to £1466m. — a loss of some £161m.

The comptroller notes that the marketing forecasts by IAI on its 1123 (predecessor of the 1124) barely matched actual sales. Examples cited were the income from 1123 sales forecasts for 1972 and 1973 which were set at £160m. but; amounted to only £113.2m. and £143.2m., respectively.

The Dow's decline ended a three-day stay for the average above 1,000. It was the seventh time this year the average had crossed the landmark point and then slipped back again. (AP)

Unbudging fundamentalism

THE HAUSNER BILL providing for civil marriage for Jewish couples disqualified by Jewish religious law — halacha — which was defeated in the Knesset yesterday, constitutes a nostalgic reminder of the halcyon ante-bellum days of 1973 when Israel thought it could afford the luxury of earnestly debating the question of who may or may not marry whom.

The bill was an outgrowth of the notorious "mamzerim case" in which a brother and sister were stigmatized by the Petah Tikva Rabbinical Court as mamzerim, (the fruit of an illicit union, and thus barred from marrying Jews). It took the talmudic wiles of Chief Rabbi Goren who convened a secret rabbinical court to enable the two to marry the spouses of their choice, under the aegis of the Military Chaplaincy to the chagrin of the more fundamentalist sectors of the rabbinate. Independent Liberal Knesset Member Gideon Hausner tabled the bill in the hopes of providing a dignified and legal solution in such cases.

The bill became a casus belli for the National Religious Party, which demanded and yesterday received its payment for coalition loyalty from its senior partner in the government, the Labour Party. The bill was defeated by the imposition of strict party discipline on the many Labour Members who would have preferred to vote for the bill in accordance with the dictates of their conscience.

Mr. Hausner is now a Cabinet Minister and no longer an MK, but the four-man ILP faction demanded action on the bill in accordance with a provision in the coalition agreement permitting them this. The defeat of the bill was a foregone conclusion, but the ILP proved again the important function of small Knesset factions: that of keeping seemingly hopeless issues alive pending a change in the basic configurations in politics, and public opinion.

The absence of civil marriage in Israel and the tendency towards fundamentalistic fossilization on the part of the dominant stream of the rabbinate are some of the more difficult aspects of Israel life to explain to outsiders. The large majority of Israel's Jewish population which is blatantly secular, nevertheless favours rabbinical marriage, if one is to judge by public opinion polls. It does not, however, favour the exclusive monopolization of the marriage function by the official orthodox rabbinate nor the extremes to which this stream of the rabbinate goes in applying every jot and tittle of halacha.

As in many other fields of life in Israel, the entire debate is one concerning surface formalities. The strictness of the rabbinate notwithstanding, anyone in Israel can marry anyone else: in Cyprus or other countries which provide civil marriage for foreigners, if one has the price of two return tickets; through Mexican proxy marriages, if one has the price of an expensive lawyer; through private marriage, without benefit of clergy, which halacha permits; and through common-law cohabitation, which is nearly as fully protected by civil legislation as are marriages with rabbinical sanction. All these forms are recognized by Israel civil courts, but are guaranteed to lead to problems with the rabbinate, a generation later, when one's children will want to marry.

What is wrong with these "solutions" is that they are undignified, expensive, or both. The majority of pragmatic Israelis, and their political leaders, have generally, and justly, been unwilling to exacerbate the Wars of the Jews and extend them to the area of religion in regard to issues which affect, at most, a few hundred couples, and in the end revolve around such basically unpolitical concepts as dignity, convenience, or principle.

The continued forbearance of the secular majority, which is so crucial to the preservation of domestic social solidarity, can be guaranteed, however, only if it finds a counterpart in a liberal and humane rabbinate. Israel indeed has rabbis who are deeply concerned with adapting halacha to the real and changing needs of the people to whom they are meant to be spiritual mentors. But the dominant trend continues to be in the direction of forbidding and inflexible fundamentalism.

The Labour Party leadership had hoped that the assumption of the office of Chief Rabbi by Rabbi Shlomo Goren would spark the beginnings of a reversal of this trend, but these hopes have remained unfulfilled during his three year incumbency.

So many, so far, so often

WE LIVE WITH a constant, but vague, awareness of the constant international peregrinations of our Cabinet Ministers and a good part of the senior members of the administrative and academic establishments. It comes as a shock, however, to learn that the official junkets alone cost the country IL20m. a year, a fact brought out in the Knesset yesterday by Likud Member Gideon Patti.

The reply of Interior Minister Yosef Burg, certainly one of our champion junketeers, that Israel must be represented at all international forums in order to fend off scurrilous Arab attacks is well taken. One wonders, however, whether this all-important task could not be performed by one or two well-qualified representatives at each conference rather than by the traditional minyem often dispatched to do the job.

There is no proof to date to sustain what may be a blasphemous suspicion, but a scientific experiment is certainly in order. We should experiment by sending one delegate only to the next conventional confrontation with the Arabs and then compare his performance with that of the hordes who have been representing us to date.

ISRAELI PRESS

HA'ARETZ (Independent) on Lebanon: "The emergence of separate regions in which the Phalangists and the left and the Palestinians run more or less normal administration is no guarantee that these areas will form the nuclei of two separate states after partition. Lebanon today has two presidents — one in office and the other destined to replace him. The army has long since disintegrated and the central regime functions largely through the intervention of Syria. The picture that has emerged is of a state whose sovereignty is being chipped away from within and from outside — a testing ground for Arab strength."

The paper notes that Damascus, which has suggested a round-table conference without the PLO, clashed with Cairo only six months ago on the same issue.

VIEWPOINT

Israel should stop appealing for aliya, abolish the special aliya incentives, and eliminate the bureaucratic network that these entail, writes MOSHE KOHN. Let the call be the natural call of the re-established sovereign Jewish national life in the Jewish homeland.

Do we really need aliya emissaries?

"ONLY 94 of the 754 emissaries" of the Jewish Agency and the World Zionist Organization serving in the Diaspora are Aliya Department emissaries, a newspaper proclaimed in a headline and lead paragraph of a story early this month.

It is not clear whether the "only" was meant to celebrate how much was being achieved by such a small number, or to complain about how few were being assigned to such a vital task. The "only," it should be noted, does not appear in the report — on which the story was based — on "Criteria and Selection" of Agency WZO emissaries submitted to the Agency Executive by a committee headed by Director-General Moshe Rivlin. The Jewish Agency, the Government, and Knesset bodies are reviewing the emissary situation for a change.

Those "only 94" aliya emissaries worry me. I suggest that the number be reduced to a number as small as possible. Aliya emissaries should be retained only in places like Vienna to expedite the passage of those Jews who are already olim — in spirit and body — who are already headed homeward to Eretz Yisrael, and only have to be directed to the vehicles waiting to bring them here, and do not have to be "encouraged" and "incentivized" to do so.

What is being proposed here is not aimed merely at saving money — a salutary thought that may be. On the contrary, what I propose instead of our existing aliya apparatus, and also instead of much of the existing klika (absorption) apparatus, will probably cost much more — initially at least. But the returns on the investment will be infinitely greater. At worst, we will "only" have eliminated the cost and effort involved in a system that has never really worked and cannot possibly do so, and we will have freed scores of capable and devoted public servants for work in areas in which their talents can be more usefully applied. I am speaking mainly of the aliya-klika system and personnel dealing with the Jews of the "free countries" — i.e., whose inhabitants are free to come and go as they wish.

Under the present system, even if the emissary in New York, Toronto, London, Paris, Bogota, Pretoria, or Melbourne is giving his clients the latest information concerning their "rights" and duties, and even if, on arrival in Israel, the olim are speedily, efficiently, and courteously directed to their rights and harnessed to their duties — and we know that this is not always the case — the system still will not work.

The most courteous, efficient and devoted of aliya-klika officials cannot guarantee that the apartment to which the family of olim is directed does not leak and that the window frames are not warped from the outset; that Mr. Olsh does not get shouted at by a bank clerk; that Mrs. Olsh does not get elbowed in the grocery store and get her bread wrapped in a soiled newspaper instead of the way she was accustomed to getting it "back home"; that their children do not have an unhappy school and playground adjustment; that the family will learn quickly how to live on their Israeli income and deal with the new semantics of Israeli life.

Then, when something — or a combination of things — goes wrong, and some individual or family decides to pack up and "go home," they blame "Israel."

In a way, they are right. It is "Israel" and not some particular agency or official, that relentlessly calls for aliya; tells Jews that Israel needs them; offers them rights, benefits, incentives to answer the call of this mutual need. Thus, by the time they come here — those Jews of the Free Countries, and often also the Jews of the "lands of distress" — too many of them have forgotten why they responded to all that call and to the offers of incentives, and the success or failure of their aliya now hinges on how completely, speedily and smoothly the promises explicitly or implicitly made to them by emissaries and brochures are kept, and on whether you and I were careful never to let them see us frown.

"Israel," then, should be freed of her status as handy scapegoat, by halting the verbal and written calls for aliya; abolishing the special aliya incentives; ceasing the promises — stated or implied — that go with these calls and incentives; and eliminating the bureaucratic network needed to implement such a system of calls, incentives, and promises. Let the call be the natural call of the re-established sovereign Jewish national life in the Jewish homeland and of the struggle to shape that life properly; let the incentive be the desire of each Jew to come home and benefit from that life; and let the promise be the promise that each of those Jews sees in being a part of, and eventually contributing to, that life.

ALL THIS, you will say, is very pretty talk, but, you will ask, how is it to be implemented? I repeat a suggestion I made in these columns over two years ago, which the late Pinhas Sapir subsequently, after becoming Chairman of the Jewish Agency Executive, put on the agenda of the Zionist Movement, and which notably the British Zionist Federation has been doing for many years but which North American Jewry has been reluctant to try. That article put forward in considerable detail a suggestion whereby every American Jewish community would become responsible for organizing and financing the "encouragement" and implementation of the aliya of its members. This would be done in cooperation with technical and professional specialists in the various relevant fields in Israel, hired by and directly responsible to the "Aliya Corporations" set up by the Diaspora communities, and with the relevant official bodies and olim associations in Israel.

The details of that proposal will not be repeated here. It should be stressed, however, that the drastic revision of the aliya-klika system I propose — at least as it pertains to the Jews of the Free Countries — will remove what has been such a source of friction between Israel and those Jews. More important, it will at long last leave them face-to-face, alone, with the question of aliya, forcing them finally to cope with it on their terms, and to develop an aliya ethos of their own as citizens of the 3,500-year-old Jewish People with its strange, unique history.

This is the first of two articles.

June thoughts in an Ivy league town

By CHARLES FENYVESI

CAMBRIDGE, MASS. — JUNE IS THE MONTH for class reunions, for talks far into the night, for revisiting old haunts where love once blossomed and problems of the world were solved over a beer or a milkshake. College room-mates have a chance to compare notes on waistlines and the skyrocketing cost of education for their children, and to gossip about friends who got divorced or became millionaires. And there is a chance to talk about politics, the nation, the world.

There is precious little optimism, and enthusiasm for any cause is as rare as a straight "A" average. One high-level Washington bureaucrat laments the lack of direction and lost opportunities under a do-nothing General Ford. A prominent attorney in and out of government service argues that there is great uncertainty in the business community, and less investment in research and in new products because no one can be sure about economic policies in the immediate future.

Nobody admits to passion about any of the presidential hopefuls. Ronald Reagan is feared as "a catastrophe." Jimmy Carter is given a cautious okay, but those who say met him warn about his "pigheadedness" and his reliance on "an inner voice" rather than on advisers.

The mood is subdued; there seems to be a conscious effort to scale down expectations and to avoid putting trust in leaders and policies. "America's Augustan Age is over, the American presence overseas is contracting. Pax Americana is no more." The argument is advanced by an African intellectual, who lectures in U.S. and African universities. He is the international civil servant of the UN and institutions like the World Bank are looking for a true cosmopolite of the post-colonial era, born in the sunset years of the British Empire, a winner of scholarships to the best schools, a popular guest in the homes of professors, writers, and government officials.

He says he is tired of the lack of talent and inspiration in American politics. He is equally sickened by Watergate and the news media, by the Jesus freaks and the strutting "America is no longer a model for the developing world." He argues, "not its economy, not its lifestyle, not its political institutions." And, as far as Africa is concerned, neither is Russia. The intelligent African looks to China for guidance "because the Chinese have created a new society without outside help and a minimum of outside influence."

He believes that the era of development assistance and the imitation of European models is over. A few of the African countries may get rich, he says, but much of the new wealth is likely to be squandered and stolen, and the middle class that will benefit will support a succession of dictatorial regimes. But for the majority of African states, even financial solvency will be an impossible dream; for them, a new Dark Age of anarchy might begin.

"What we must do is to define our goals, our values. Do we want industrial pollution, atom cities that breed crime and riots? Are we really happier with Hiltons and supermarkets stocked with TV dinners? Do we really need to buy all that super-sophisticated computerized equipment that requires dozens of specialists and repairmen no African state has — and which may be obsolete next year?"

"Could we not concentrate on our native resources — develop solar power so we won't have to buy expensive gasoline, but use the sun's air, improve our agricultural products so that we can eat better, encourage cooperative enterprises so that we won't develop a new colonial class of entrepreneurs exploiting cheap labour."

MANY OF HIS THOUGHTS reflect the new realities in America. Yet his American friends no longer listen to him as intently as in the old days when his witty denunciation of the British and the French lent flavour to dinner-table conversations and his vision of a united Africa fired the imagination of English and Political Science majors. Then, in the late 1950s, there was much talk about what should be done to help, what Americans must do.

This summer, no one would think of suggesting that we try to come to a broad agreement — much less draft a statement we might sign. There is little argument, and the talk about Africa, underdevelopment, and America's place in the world dies down half an hour after it begins.

Our African friend is reduced to a monologue over the last glass of Scotch. He is sorry to see America lose its Number One status... There has never been a world power as generous and as open to outside influence and domestic lobbying as America... The Russians are as clumsy as bears and as ferocious as tigers... The Chinese, while resourceful and admirably independent, are as doctrinaire as Jesuits or orthodox Moslems... The Arabs are selfish and vengeful; every cent from them has strings attached... It is a pity that a wedge has been driven between Israel and black Africa, but the status quo is not likely to change unless there is a breakthrough in Israel-Palestine relations... There will be no more Vietnam, but there will be more Angolas, more Biafras, more Bangla Desh scenarios — more dictatorships, more corruption, more little wars.

At other tables, our classmates talk about inflation, the chances of economic recovery this winter, and why Jerry Ford will be defeated and by whom. And everyone within earshot agrees that Henry Kissinger, our erstwhile professor, must go, and the sooner the better.

Dry Bones

POSTSCRIPTS

WE ALL TEND to talk glibly about the tremendous progress made by Israeli Arabs since 1948. In comparison with Arabs in other countries, but how many of us are able to quote facts and figures to prove the point? We might all do well to memorize the data recently provided by Prime Minister Rabin.

• While in 1949, only 32 per cent of Israeli Arabs went to school, the figure today is 92 per cent, which compares with 60 per cent in Jordan, 40 per cent in Egypt and 20 per cent in Algeria.

• The life expectancy of Israeli Arabs today is 72, compared with 53 for Arabs in the administered territories, 54 in Egypt and Algeria, 52 in Iraq and 42 in the Sudan.

• The average annual income of an Israeli Arab family is IL23,000. This compares with the all-Israel average of IL26,000 and the average of IL20,000 in the Arab countries.

Defence Minister Shimon Peres added that the average per capita income of Israeli Arabs is in fact higher than that of Greeks and Italians.

ANYONE who saw the Swedish Royal wedding on television will agree that Queen Silvia is a real pin-up girl. She must be quite the best-looking royal wife, with the possible exception of Greek Queen Anna Maria (but there is a question about the latter's monarchical standing). What interests us in the fact that the German-born commoner has a Brazilian mother, whose maiden name, we learn, was de Toledo. Since we have been told that names based on place names often indicate a Marrano origin, we are wondering whether in addition to the remarkable looks (she and King Gustav made a strikingly handsome couple), the new Swedish Queen has some Jewish blood — even diluted by now — in her veins.

THE WEST GERMAN drive to ban "extremists" out of federal and public services has raised general unfavourable echoes abroad, according to news dispatches. The German press has been quoted as regretting gloomily about the growing threat to the German image of this version of McCarthyism. But was the concluding paragraph of Bonn report in "The Times" really which gave its ironic twist to the subject:

"It took a political satirist to point out, on a specially designed poster he sent to all newspaper offices West Germany, that for membership of the Nazi Party, SS and other Nazi organizations, of which are banned under article 18 is still no bar to public service."

READERS' LETTERS

Jewish Education

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir, — I read with interest Sraya Shapiro's article, "Agency fails in Diaspora education" (June 10). According to this article, Esther Horvitz advocates that the Government assume responsibility for Jewish education in the Diaspora, saying that Israel owes it to Jewish parents to help them keep their children Jewish.

In the same article, Sraya Shapiro quotes Education Minister Aharon Yadin as saying that, if action is not taken immediately, the next generation in the Diaspora may not need any Jewish education.

As a former resident and native-born citizen of America who came to aliya over seven years ago, I believe these very fears for the children of the Diaspora apply here in Israel. One can find out in a two-minute conversation with any pupil how much or how little of Judaism and Jewish values is taught here in the secular schools. I think that it is of utmost importance that our system of "Jewish education" in schools other than religious ones be corrected and revamped so that we here may really have a Jewish tomorrow to look forward to.
